

Politipoll: December 28-30th 2023

The First polling in over a year has finally been completed, and since its an election season, should give some interesting insights into what our state wants for the future. We are in for a heated battle, with an attack ad and attack website floating around the state pointed at each governor candidate.

First Preference for the Next Governor

Incumbent Governor Damien Key leads in the initial polling with a strong 60% This is a significant positive against his first preferences during the 2023 Summer election, receiving 55.73% of first preferences against 3 other candidates. Becks Lawson received 40% of the first preferences of those surveyed. She would need a swing of more than 10% in order to win the governorship.

We asked viewers about their previous votes from the Autumn election, and roughly 35%~ of Damien Key voters in the last election, said they are voting for Becks Lawson this time, with the remaining 60%~ staying with Damien Key.

While every House of Representative candidate has been automatically elected due to the states no-contest policy for 5 or less registered candidates, Joanna Poole and Artemis Blackthorne command a strong 30%+ respectively of the first preferences of those surveyed.

The following is a visualisation of the estimated preference based on the voter's governor preference, and first representative preference. A Majority of Lawson and Key supporters, support Joanna Poole and Artemis Blackthorne. Almost no Lawson supporters put Lilith Stark as a first preference.

First Preference Representatives

Based on second preferences, A 1/3 of support flows to Emilie Paxton, then Lucas Evans
